1. Revision to Scope of Services

Metro-Directed Outage Changes After Mobilization

If an outage previously approved by Metro is postponed, interrupted, shortened, or terminated by Metro after Contractor mobilization for reasons outside the Contractor's control, Contractor may be compensated for reasonable, documented, and unavoidable direct costs resulting from the change.

Compensation for standby labor and additional mobilization or remobilization shall be based upon the applicable rates submitted by Contractor in the Bid Schedule and incorporated into the Contract.

Contractor shall:

1. Promptly notify Metro when an outage change is expected to result in additional cost or schedule impact.
2. Take reasonable measures to mitigate standby time, remobilization costs, and other impacts.
3. Maintain documentation adequate to substantiate any requested additional compensation.
4. Obtain written authorization from Metro before incurring additional compensable costs. Where prior written authorization is not practicable due to circumstances requiring immediate action, Contractor shall notify Metro as soon as reasonably practicable and obtain written confirmation of the additional work and associated costs.

No additional compensation shall be provided for delays, interruptions, remobilization, or additional costs attributable to the Contractor, including Contractor staffing, equipment, safety, scheduling, performance, or other circumstances within the Contractor's reasonable control.

Where a Metro-directed outage change affects the Contractor's ability to complete the Work within the established schedule, Metro may authorize an equitable adjustment to the affected completion schedule.

Mobilization, for purposes of this provision, occurs when Contractor personnel or equipment required for the approved outage have been dispatched to or have arrived at the designated Metro work location in accordance with the approved outage schedule.
